

atkinsthomson

Defamation and Privacy Conditional Fee Agreements - No win, no fee

In certain defamation and privacy cases, we may work on a Conditional Fee Agreement basis (widely referred to as "No Win, No Fee"). This essentially means that you will only have to pay our fees if you win your case and in these situations, the opponent tends to pay a significant proportion of these, if not all. If you lose, you do not have to pay our fees but you will still be responsible for the payment of your opponent's fees. It is possible to obtain insurance to protect you if you do lose the case, the cost of which can be recovered if you win.

As our costs are at risk in Conditional Fee Agreement claims, before agreeing to act we have to carefully consider the likelihood of success. It is a testament to our ability to judge these cases that, to date, we have never lost a claim undertaken on this basis.